

Private Eliezer Nehemiah Palmer©
Regimental number: 3493
3rd Battalion, British West Indies Regiment

born: 4 February 1893 - died: 10 July 1917

Private Eliezer Nehemiah Palmer was probably born on 4 February 1893 in Duanvale in the parish of Trelawny in Jamaica, the son of William and Rebecca (nee Bailey) Palmer. William was a labourer¹ and the family was Baptist.² Eliezer probably had nine siblings: Joseph Ellis (born on 25 April 1878),³ Sarah Jane (born on 7 February 1880 but died a few days later on 9 February 1880),⁴ Thomas James (born on 26 February 1881),⁵ John William (born on 27 July 1885, but died a few days later on 31 July 1885),⁶ Peter William (born on 18 November 1886),⁷ unknown male child (born on 8 August 1889),⁸ Hegla Advira (born on 25 December 1890),⁹ Eliezer Nehemiah, Mary Keturah (born on 31 March 1895)¹⁰ and Priscella Marceta (born on 1 July 1900).¹¹

Eliezer served with the 3rd Battalion of the British West Indies Regiment.¹² The BWIR was formed in 1915 and about 15,000 Caribbean men volunteered, through patriotism and loyalty to the British Empire, to serve in the regiment.¹³ The largest contingent—over 10,000 men—came from Jamaica.

However, the British War Office was not keen on engaging black soldiers in combat roles. “The issue centred on the servicemen’s ‘colour’, and indirectly on their African/slavery heritage.”¹⁴ As a result, the men of the BWIR were largely confined to support duties—digging trenches, building roads and gun emplacements, acting as stretcher-bearers, loading ships and trains, and working in ammunition dumps. Yet these were dangerous jobs, often carried out under enemy artillery and sniper fire. Of the over 10,000 that left Jamaica, 1000 never returned.¹⁵

After the Battle of the Somme in the second half of 1916, there was a shortage of manpower on the Western Front. In 1916, the first four BWIR battalions were stationed in Egypt. In September 1916, the 3rd Battalion sailed to Marseilles and, from there, were taken to the Western Front and attached to heavy artillery units. When they arrived, they were immediately shelled by German artillery.

The shelling was a reminder of the significant factor of war: that whether combatant or non-combatant, all troops faced the same dangers in the combat zone. The Battalion’s job was to start an ammunition dump and repair the roads, so that shells could be transported to the artillery in support of the front-line troops.

In the winter of 1916, the soldiers were moved to Boulogne where they worked in the docks loading and unloading ships. By early 1917, many of the soldiers had died from pneumonia, primarily brought on by their exposure to the cold. The Battalion was then moved south to the warmer climate of Marseilles. There the Battalion lost many soldiers, but this time from measles.

On 15 March 1917, the Battalion, before returning to the Front, but given the honour of being allowed to march through Marseilles after which they were given dinner by the French people. In April 1917, they were moved back to the combat zone.... From May 1917, they were stationed at Ypres where they supplied siege battalions at night. Under heavy shellfire, they cleared up battery positions and loaded ammunition.¹⁶

In July 1917, six soldiers from the BWRI were killed in an explosion in a dump, presumably an ammunition dump.¹⁷ Eliezer was one of these. He died at No. 1 Canadian Casualty Clearing Station on 10 July 1917, with his five comrades and was buried in Adinkerke Churchyard Extension (Grave Reference: 822).¹⁸ Adinkerke Churchyard Extension is in Adinkerke, near Veurne, Belgium. It is a Belgian Military Cemetery on the west side of the churchyard less than a kilometre from the Adinkerke Military Cemetery. Commonwealth troops held the Front from the Belgian coast inland for about 70 kilometres from June to November 1917. No. 1 CCCS was at Adinkerke for a short time in June. There are 67 Commonwealth graves from the Great War in the extension cemetery.¹⁹

His mother, Mrs. R. Palmer, of Clarkestown, in Trelawny, Jamaica, was notified of his death. The monies owing to him from the army upon his death was given to a number of people—Miss Eliza Knowles and his siblings Joseph Ellis, Edgar and Keturah.²⁰

The contributions of the BWIR were later recognized by Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig. In 1917 he said:

[Their] work has been very arduous and has been carried out almost continuously under shell-fire. In spite of casualties the men have always shown themselves willing and cheerful workers, and the assistance they have rendered has been much appreciated by the units to which they have been attached and for whom they have been working. The physique of the men is exceptional, their discipline excellent and their morale high.²¹

Eliezer was awarded the British War Medal (for service overseas between 1914 and 1918) and the Victory Medal (for service in an operational theatre).²² He is remembered on the Caribbean online Roll of Honour.²³
